“Ring Harry’s and see if the Contessa is there,” Colonel Cantwell says in Ernest Hemingway’s novel Across the River and Into the Trees. This late novel encapsulates the conflicted relationship Hemingway had with the Serenissima and with Italy. When the novel was published in 1950, it is said that Hemingway was so popular around the world that only Christ and Chairman Mao were slightly more recognizable icons.

Now, as then, Hemingway is a brand in world literature, a beacon in the development of English prose, but also a global cultural phenomenon. As for other places—Pamplona, Key West, Paris, Havana—Hemingway contributed to the international aura of Venice. Reading his works in the Venetian context opens an examination of history, geography, cultural critique, language, and cultural history, and this interdisciplinary course proposes to combine these fields of study.

With his ubiquitous presence in Venice and in the World, Hemingway offers us a key to many aspects of twentieth-century literature and culture. Reading Hemingway today in the privileged context where these texts take place or originate will enable students to discover a master of style of the English language and really understand why Hemingway may be the most influential western author of the twentieth century.

While Hemingway is a monument of twentieth-century literature, he does not stand alone. This course will resituate him not only in the Anglo-American tradition including Shakespeare, Byron, Henry James, and John Ruskin, but also alongside other European writers, such as Goethe, Mann, Dostoevsky, and the Romance tradition with Venetian authors such as Bembo, Casanova and Goldoni; and beyond the Alps, Musset, Proust, and George Sand. Reading Hemingway will give students a chance to immerse themselves in some of the most fascinating developments of Venetian, European and global literature and culture and seize its contemporary relevance and impact.

Methodology and structure

Each day will feature a major lecture exploring a key aspect of Hemingway's work and presence in Venice, followed by a two-hour seminar and discussion. The afternoon workshops will help students get an in-depth understanding of the texts in close reading sessions of Hemingway's works and other cultural texts including film and other art works. As the course advances, its interdisciplinary character will become increasingly important as afternoon sessions will be used to combine the different approaches. The course will propose excursions and in situ lectures that will enable students to fully grasp the relation between Venice and Hemingway.

Who is it for?

Graduate students (MA and PhD) from various disciplines: Literary Studies, American Studies, Global Studies, History, Politics, Media and Film Studies, Cultural Studies, Art, Gender Studies, Queer Studies.

Learning outcomes

An in-depth understanding of Hemingway's impact on world literature and culture.

A theoretically informed view of U.S. cultural and linguistic influence on the twentieth century and beyond.

A fine appreciation of Hemingway's works from the artistic and stylistic points of view.
